STATEMENT FROM MC TANK TRANSPORT INC.

MC Tank Transport Inc., a subsidiary of The Kenan Advantage Group, Inc., confirms that equipment associated with our operations is involved in the hazardous materials incident on Progress Avenue in Toledo, Ohio. The chemical involved in this incident is glycidyl methacrylate, an industrial chemical used to make certain plastics, paints and coatings perform better.

Our immediate and overriding concern is the safety of area residents, emergency responders and our employees.

We are working closely with Toledo Fire & Rescue and other emergency authorities, who are directing the response. We have mobilized additional specialized emergency response resources to assist.

We understand the serious disruption this incident has caused to nearby residents and businesses, particularly those required to evacuate their homes. We are committed to assisting those affected.

We urge everyone in the area to follow all evacuation and shelter-in-place instructions issued by local authorities.

We will provide additional verified information as it becomes available.

Our first priority is protecting people and supporting the emergency response.

At this moment, we are working with the American Red Cross to arrange emergency lodging and transportation assistance for displaced residents.
